Whitesboro, April 3. 1843.

My dear Brother,

I write a few lines now; first to thank you in the name of the Savior for your generous offer. It was kind in you thus to think of us. So, I add remember, you have done before. Magnanimity is its own reward. And this, you cannot but enjoy. We know no name, which we would commission, if many were at our service, than the name of A.A. Phelps. Rest assured, we shall be forward to avail ourselves of the benefit you offer. But, secondly, how soon do you expect to leave for London? We would place in your hands such books as you specify; & with to know how much time we may reckon on for making out such a package, as the case demands. Copies of the Four Sermons, uncorrected with any thing else, we could not well furnish. Could you without much inconvenience take instead thereof a dozen or more copies of Green's Miscellanies? In that book the Four Sermons may be found.

Be so kind as to return an answer to these inquiries as soon as may be convenient; & suggest freely any hints, which in this matter you may think appropriate. May the Savior comfort & sustain you amidst your afflictions! My love to the dear boy, who perhaps remembers me.

Yours affec. B. Green.
